There will be no Bonaire Reporter published next week in keeping with our policy of printing four issues a month. (June has five Fridays.) The next Reporter will be printed on June 27 (dated June 29-July 6, 2007).

A mericans flying to the Caribbean may be able to fly this summer without a passport, temporarily, under a new plan announced by the Bush administration last Friday. The report by the Associated Press comes amidst a backlog in passport processing by the US Department of State and Homeland Security. The Department set new records in March and April, issuing more than three million passports to Americans planning international travel. With passport demand at record levels, passport production time was pushed back to 10 to 12 weeks. Caribbean tourism officials complained about the rule’s impact on tourism to the region.

Officials are expected to announce that the passport rule will be temporarily waived if air travelers can show they have already applied for a passport for air travel to and from Canada and Mexico, South and Central America and the Caribbean. The waiver is slated to last until September. Air travelers will be allowed back into the country if they now present a State Department receipt showing their passport application is being processed and a government-issued photo ID such as a driver’s license, the report said. US citizens with pending passport applications can obtain proof of application at http://travel.state.gov.

Effective immediately passengers traveling on American Airlines and American Eagle to certain destinations in the Caribbean will not be able to check extra bags or boxes during the embargo period due to heavy summer loads and high volumes of checked baggage to specific destinations. This is in addition to the box embargo for flights originating from and passing through New York’s John F. Kennedy International Airport (JFK) to all Caribbean and Latin America destinations.

The baggage embargo applies to the Dominican Republic, Haiti and as well as all American Eagle flights to and from San Juan.

Oversize, overweight and excess baggage will not be accepted for flights to the destinations covered by the bag and box embargo. Passengers may check two bags weighing a maximum of 50 pounds each at no charge. The maximum weight for embargoed cities is 70 pounds, with bags weighing between 51-70 pounds subject to a $25 fee. One-carry-on bag will be allowed with a maximum size of 45 inches and a maximum weight of 40 pounds.

Sports equipment, such as golf bags, bikes and surfboards, can be accepted as part of the total checked bag allowance, although additional charges may apply.

Jamaica’s House of Representatives last Tuesday gave the nod to a resolution calling for US$125 million to assist in financing the cash-strapped Air Jamaica, less than a week after the government announced the sale of the airline’s money-losing London route to Virgin Atlantic. Perhaps now they can add an extra flight to Bonaire?

Following complaints by island officials, the financial supervision proposed in a draft document relating to the new status of Bonaire, Statia and Saba beginning December next year got cleared up. The Dutch financial supervision for Bonaire, Statia and Saba is similar to the financial supervision that is in place for all Dutch municipalities, Dutch State Secretary of Kingdom Relations Ank Bijleveld-Schouten said Friday. The Dutch will intervene only when an island government is faltering in handling its finances.

Leader of Bonaire’s ruling party, Ramonistio Booi, said he believed the discussions had been fruitful and the draft law on the Dutch had presented would be modified. “They understood our complaints,” he added.

Governor of the Netherlands Antilles, Frits Goedgedrag, has signed a federal decree approving amnesty for 3,000 drug couriers who received jail sentences before 2004 but haven’t served their time in prison. Half of them will lose their passports for one to three years. To get amnesty they will have to hand over their passports to the Prosecutor’s Office.

According to Curaçao Prosecutor, Giuseppe Veen-Jonkhou, her office is busy with people turning in their passports. The Prosecutor’s Office requested the grace period because it is highly unlikely that these couriers would ever go to jail, simply because there is no room for them in the prison.

New Post Netherlands Antilles (NPNA) plans to break its contract for postal services with the Central Government, effective December 1st following a Central Government notice of default.

The Canadian company, a branch of Canada Post, had not complied with their contractual obligations. It’s alleged that the Canadians have not invested in the Antillean postal services as required. And, what’s more, that the New Post is extorting high management fees, although the contract is not for managing the company but for a long-term concession. A total of 245 people work for the New Post on the five Antilles islands.

DIVING with DEE

If you’re a Reef Lover ...

I was waiting for the lunch break in the Caribbean Nature Alliance meeting so I could bring in the “Living with a Razor Sharp Skeleton” stickers. I ran into Gabi Nicholas, who had been a divemaster at Habitat for many years, and showed him the sticker.

Gabi remembers clearly his frustrations with all the misunderstandings divers have about coral. As we parted, he smiled at me and said, “Don’t forget, Dee: ‘If you’re a reef lover … better hover!’”

What a great phrase! If only the act of hovering was as simple as the desire to hover! “Hover” is defined by Encarta as “to float in the air without moving very far from the same spot,” or “to stay in the air in the same position by rapidly beating the wings.” Let’s adapt that for underwater by removing “in the air” and adjusting “wings,” and we’re left with “to float with-air and you’re still ascending, you need more weight. Not a lot!

If you begin to sink when you stop kicking, introduce small amounts of air into your BC. When you stop sinking, stop putting air into your BC, and hover. If you’ve got some air in your BC and are successfully hovering in place, descend 5 feet or so and stop. You’re likely to find if you don’t kick, you’ll continue to sink. This happens because when you went deeper, the air in your BC compressed a little and gave you less buoyancy. Go back to where you can hover without kicking, and ascend another 5 feet or so. You’ll probably continue to rise—because the air in your BC increased in volume as the depth lessened.

We make adjustments for our buoyancy changes throughout each dive, sometimes with air in or out of our BC’s, and sometimes by simply kicking more or harder. One thing to bear in mind is that if you’ve always got air in your BC, you’ve always got bigger adjustments to make. Why bother? Diving will be easier and more tranquil if you remove that extra weight.

Here’s how: at the end of a dive, take the time to put some of your weights where you can get to them, make sure your BC has no air in it, and go to a sand patch in shallow water. Your negative buoyancy should have you resting on the sand. Take off a single 2# weight and put it on the sand. If any part of you (including your tank) is still in contact with the sand, take off another pound or two. Continue this process until you begin to drift slowly upwards.

If you’re used to being overweighted, you’ll want to dive with this weight for a bit. But, eventually, take off another pound or two. This keeps you slightly buoyant at the end of your dive, which brings you to the surface more easily and enables you to be a Reef Angel.

A few years ago I learned that having the right amount of weight wasn’t always enough. Although I’d checked her weighting and it was fine, one of my dive buddies couldn’t stop struggling underwater. Suddenly I remembered something Cathy Church had told me, that BC’s with weight pockets sometimes put the weights in the wrong position for the diver. My dive buddy needed just two pounds moved from her BC to a weight belt and placed at her stomach, and she could easily hover horizontally above the reef. One problem with hovering perfectly horizontally: if you’re close to the reef, a big kick could result in your fin hitting the coral. So I prefer what I call the Reef Angel position: slightly head-down, slightly fins-up in the water. This enables us to look closely at the reef, while keeping our fins away. One of the parts of us that causes the most damage to coral: our hands. The Reef Angel position isn’t precisely hovering, since it requires gentle kicking for us to keep our position. The Reef Angel position is the way reef lovers hover.

Dee will be off-island from early July and will return in early November. June 25 will be her last slide show until November.

Did you Know... Algae can make fuel?

There have been giant advances in the field of biodiesel production in the past few years as a result of increasing demands for oil and growing pressure to reduce the burning of fossil fuels. The most exciting, in my opinion (since I’m a marine biologist), is the use of algae to make biodiesel. Unicellular algae are grown in ponds or specially manufactured tanks in sunny regions. The brilliant part is that some companies and research groups are feeding the algae scum from smokestacks and in some cases sewage! Talk about recycling! So these algae grow exponentially, eat the nasties, and produce a type of ‘clean’ fuel that our current transportation system can easily convert to. In tests, algae have been shown to be easy to grow, take less space than most crops that produce biodiesel, and produce more oil than soybeans. Don’t be surprised if you start hearing more about algae and biodiesel. Perhaps Bonaire will even be able to produce its own type of clean fuel in the near future.

Letter to the Editor

Too Much Tourism Can Hurt

Dear Editor:

In what fairy tale world is TCB director Ronella Croes living when she claims that growth in tourism will not affect the flora and fauna of Bonaire? The TCB’s goal of 80,000 tourists per year until 2009 is a recipe for disaster without a comprehensive, environmentally-sensitive infrastructure to process and make sure all those tourists’ excrement nutrient-rich wastewater does not end up in the sea. It’s been proven to fuel the algae blooms that are slowly suffocating Bonaire’s reefs. In fact, the Littlers’ algae survey conducted in November 2006 reported an “overly stressed environment” on Bonaire’s reefs with a “disturbing abundance of dead and diseased coral” with many sites dominated by blue-green algae slime smothering coral. Do the TCB and the government just ignore these reports and continue with business as usual? Instead they should be collaborating on how to take advantage of the plans and the money already available to expeditiously create wastewater treatment so Bonaire doesn’t lose the tourists already coming to dive and snorkel.

When Croes contends that “Bonaire has to develop economically and not always all decisions should be taken 100% in favor of nature and culture,” she ignores an essential fact: the natural world of Bonaire is Bonaire’s economy! What will Croes propose as a solution when the reefs are degraded, when divers, snorkelers, and eco-tourists no longer spend their money to come to Bonaire, and all that’s left are the cruise ship passengers swimming in sewage over dead coral rubble and looking for salves and balms to heal their sores and lesions caused by fecal matter in the water? More casinos? More duty free shops? More all inclusive resorts? Hmm, sounds suspiciously like Aruba, doesn’t it? It is time for the TCB, government officials, and the transition team from Holland to heed the science and ecology of a healthy reef so Bonaire does not become Aruba.

Dr. Pauline Kayes, Bonaire and Champaign, Illinois
It’s all “go” in the world of Bonaire’s Loras. Chicks are hatching out from their eggs, and the parrot team has been rushing around trying to work out who is hatching on which days. Many of the tree nests are difficult to see into so we use one of the parrotwatch night vision cameras on the end of a pole so that we can see what is going on deep inside the cavity. Poachers have a different approach, and they cut holes in the trees with chain saws which ruins the nest for future years and is so widespread on Bonaire that it actually limits the number of pairs that can breed in a year.

Olivia is still sitting on eggs, and any day now her chicks will be hatching out. The latest movie on parrotwatch.org shows Oswald, the loyal husband, visiting the nest to have a look at the eggs and to check that everything is ok! The noises he and Olivia make are really entertaining. We’re sure that next week the movie will be of chicks. These are exciting times!

Part of the parrot team’s work involves visiting nests to weigh and measure the chicks and generally record how they are developing. One of the new parrot team members suggested the chicks were ugly, but dear reader, do not be fooled for this is certainly not the case! At this age baby parrots are beautiful tiny pink bundles of joy. Their eyes and ears are not open, and they have only a few wisps of white down on their bodies. One chick that was checked recently weighed only 18 grams, the same weight as three, one-guilder coins! It is amazing to think that in two months this “tiny pink bundle of joy” will be a colorful beautiful parrot about to fly from the nest into the big wide world. See it for yourself and help protect Bonaire’s Loras by visiting www.parrotwatch.org.

Dear Olivia,
It is good to hear that your husband Oswald helps to feed the chicks when they are growing up. I know from experience that bringing up four youngsters can be hard work! But what do you do about food for yourself when you are sitting inside your nest on eggs all day long and when you are busy feeding your chicks?

Faithfully,
Joan E. Mitchell

Dear Joan,
I certainly couldn’t manage to bring up my chicks on my own and Oswald is a really attentive husband and father. When I’m sitting on my eggs I have to rely entirely on Oswald for food. He brings me about four meals a day and most of his day is spent foraging in the nearby mondi, or least that’s what he tells me he’s been doing. He flies back to our nest and calls from outside. When I hear him I take a break and we fly off together to our favorite tree. There he regurgitates food to me from his crop. It sounds disgusting when you are not used to it, but like many things in life you learn to love it!

When the eggs have hatched I first share this food with the chicks who ravenously devour it, and I still stay in the nest most of the time. Even then, I remain dependent on my dear Oswald. When the chicks are a little bit older I can leave them by themselves more and go and forage for myself along with Oswald. I do hope this gives you an insight into my day-to-day life, Joan. If you are up and in the mondi early in the morning you might even see other Loras’ husbands sharing food with their loved ones!

Best wishes,
Olivia Parrot

Imprisoned Innocents

By any measure the view of the prison camp was grim

Being in the wrong place at the wrong time was the fate of many Germans who lived on the ABC islands on April 10, 1940. Because Germany invaded Holland that day, hundreds of innocent people on Aruba and Curacao were arrested and brought to the prison internment camp on Bonaire.

Jannes Sint Jago’s recent book, Wuiven vanaf de Waranda (Waving From the Porch), tells all about this trying time. He presented his book recently at the Divi Flamingo Beach Resort. Not coincidentally, the hotel is on the same spot where the camp was located. The book presentation was in cooperation with the organization FEBON (Fundashon Enciklopedia Bonaire). The main mission of this foundation is to compile an encyclopedia of and for Bonaire.

The first part of the evening’s presentation was based on Junnes Sint Jago’s book and was followed by poems being read and songs performed which were composed by the famous Bonairean WW II inmate, the late Medado de Marchena.

Wuiven vanaf de Warand is the first book that’s completely devoted to the prison camps that existed during World War II on Bonaire and Curacao. When Sint Jago started to investigate these camps he got a good view of the conditions the prisoners were forced to live in, and he found out these conditions were far from good. Sint Jago says he had two goals in writing this book. One was to  "translate the books from Dutch into German, English and Papiamentu.”

The other reason was to "rehabilitate the names and information of the prisoners, and make sure they won’t be forgotten.” “Most of the people who were in the prison camps,” he says, "aren’t alive anymore, but I’m sure their families have a desire to get more knowledge about the situation their relatives were in. That’s why my next step will be to translate the books from Dutch into German, English and Papiamentu.”

Sint Jago explains it wasn’t easy to find new information about the prisoners. He studied a very long time at the central historic archive in Curacao. He explained, “It was very hard to find out how many years the camps were being used and how long people were held in the camps. What I also found out is that almost all the people in the prisons were innocent of having committed a crime.”

Arrests

As mentioned, the reasons for all the arrests were because of the German invasion of Holland. As Aruba and Curacao were providing 80% of the oil needed for the allied air forces, it was important that those islands be protected. “There were three ways to attack the oil refineries,” Sint Jago continued. “One, by torpedo attacks by German U-boats (submarines). Two, by bombardments from the air. Three, by sabotage of the installations. Soon it was clear that the first two points were impossible for the Germans to achieve. The third possibility was a great risk though. As a precautionary measure, the Dutch started to arrest all the Germans or people with a German background on the island.”

According to Sint Jago and what the book is about as well, is that there were several different groups of people arrested and sent to the prison camps in Bonaire. The first were 220 Germans who were working on ships in the harbors of Curacao and Aruba. The second group was made up of 202 Germans living in Aruba and Curacao. Within a single day they were arrested and sent to the prison camp in Bonaire. The women were placed in schools, the children in kindergarten and the men were quartered in the Sint Bernardus girls’ school. Because all this had to be arranged so quickly the facilities weren’t adequate at all. There wasn’t enough food, water, and there weren’t enough toilets. The people had to sleep on sails.

In the meantime the Dutch were working hard to build a real prison camp. Across from the camp, they also constructed a new sports complex. It was 300 by 400 meters with a soccer field, walking trails, jumping areas and a playground for kids. The new camp was located just outside of Kralendijk (Playa) in the neighborhood called Playa Pariba (located on the site of the present Divi Flamingo Resort).

"After a while, the male prisoners were brought to the barracks. Because Bonaire is a tropical island it was necessary to keep the windows and doors open. The men also could spend time on the porch (waranda) all day (photo). Although it wasn’t allowed, the men could see the women’s camp from there could wave (wuiven) to them.

Small, single houses were built for the women with children, and the single women were housed in long barracks.

In this group there were some famous local names, such as the Zielinski and Gressman families. Other well known personalities who lived in the same barracks and were born in Germany and Austria, but lived in Curacao were the Jewish Fred Fisher and Doctor Benesch. Sint Jago explains further, “They were moved later on to a country house on the Guatemala Plantation because they were being teased a lot by their Aryan compatriotes.” Another group of prisoners, those who criticized the system, were seen as a danger to the state. They were arrested on a later date than the 10th of April. This group consisted of 20 men. They weren’t immediately sent over to Bonaire but were kept for two and a half months in the punishment camps under terrible conditions before being sent to the camp in Bonaire. A famous prisoner in this group is the poet and singer, Medardo de Marchena.

Escape Attempts

Sint Jago continued his presentation by showing some pictures of the prison camps and of the guards and inmates of the prison. Some interesting things came out of this, such as an escape attempt by two inmates who wanted to paddle to Venezuela in a rowboat. “They didn’t get very far though,” says Sint Jago. “They couldn’t believe how they got to Venezuela so fast with the boat and were already celebrating their successful escape attempt when they found out they weren’t on Venezuela. Instead they were on the beach at Klein Bonaire, and they had to wait until the guards picked them up again.”

There was also one more escape attempt, which failed as well. “I think it was more out of boredom to attempt the escape, instead of a necessity,” said Sint Jago.

According to the writer, the prison camp on Bonaire “had a great influence on the island, and it was the start of the building of many hotels and even a hospital to take care of the military and the police officers who were needed on the island to secure the prison camps.”

Sint Jago emphasizes again the importance of the book he has written. “I think that it’s about time that after 60 years, the history has finally been documented.”

The night of the presentation was concluded with two poems and a song from Medardo de Marchena. The first poem, Salve Bonaire (Greet Bonaire), was presented by poetess Tica Sealy. The second poem, Ai Bonaire (Oh Bonaire), was presented by Hubert Vis. The song, Bu Lawaya, performed and sung by Capt. Johnny Craane, was known to nearly the entire audience as the song was in the top popular list in 1945.

The festivities of City Café’s 10-year anniversary were probably impossible to miss for anybody living here or any tourist visiting Bonaire. It’s mainly because City Café is located in the center of town and every hour of the day there was something going on. But the 10-day-long 10th anniversary of City Café has finally reached its end. Last Sunday the festivities were concluded with an amazing show of fireworks. In a period of 10 years City Café, starting from scratch, has developed itself into a booming business. General Manager Sigma Stuart explains the secret behind it. “Is it the best restaurant? Maybe. Is it the best disco? I don’t think so. But what I know for sure is that City Café has become the heart of Playa (Kralendijk).”

During the 10-year celebration many different activities were organized, and at night bands played until closing time. After this intensive period of events, City was closed for three days as the employees, the entire staff, were rewarded for their hard work and got to spend a three-day holiday in Valencia, Venezuela, for some R and R. All the festivities attracted huge crowds. Many of the bands that had performed during City’s 10-year life returned to play during the anniversary events. One group that returns again and again is the Chispa band which got the crowd moving with their Latin Salsa tunes.

Other activities ranged from bike parades to mini triathlons; from card playing and dart tournaments to children’s matinees. There were free lunches for the elders and jump-ups for the younger ones. During the last weekend the street in front of City was crammed with stands selling all sorts of things, games and more. The Café collected money to support Jong Bonaire, the youth activity organization, to help provide them with a sound system. The money will be handed over to Jong Bonaire on June 18. The end of the anniversary celebration doesn’t mean there won’t be any more activities at City Café for the rest of the year. On the contrary! In October they will, as always, play a big role in the Regatta festivities, and many other bands are already scheduled.

Bonaire/Hato –

Parked in front of Roy Winklaar’s house in Hato is a white Volkswagen Beetle in mint condition. The car must have been made in Mexico because of the fact that there is only one exhaust pipe attached to the muffler instead of two. This also means that the car is fitted with a 1.6 liter, four-stroke, four-cylinder, air cooled boxer engine with fuel injection and a catalyser.

Mr. Winklaar invites me in and tells me that I am right; it is a Mexican-made car. The vehicle was built in 1997 and registered, B-4206. Roy has removed the running boards and the bumpers from the car because he has big plans for his white lady. Mr. Winklaar will transform his original “Buggy” into a so called “Bajabug.” The front and the rear of the car will be shortened; the front boot (trunk) will be changed; the four mudguards will be taken off and be replaced with fiberglass ones. Four wide and impressive 15-inch wheels are waiting in the garden to be fitted to the axles. The car will undergo a complete metamorphosis.

Roy just loves the Volkswagen Beetle. He has been buying and selling, repairing and restoring Volkswagens for ages. He bought this white one in Curacao. The car didn’t run and was parked from 2004 until 2007 without going even a mile! Roy bought it, brought it to Bonaire and just put it on the road again.

Another Volkswagen Beetle is parked in a shed in the garden. This one is painted yellow. Roy just uses the car for parts. And in another corner I recognize a real Opel GT. The German-made car is fitted with a powerful 1.9 liter engine and was built in 1971. This car is made of the right metals, before the oil crises and is screaming for a restoration. According to Mr. Winklaar this is the only Opel GT on the island. At the moment he is not quite sure about what to do with the Opel because his first and main target is to convert the Mexican Beetle into a real Bajabug.

He continues his work. He is searching for four adapters to fit the five-hole big steel rims to the four-bolt fitted drum brakes. Finally the car will be resprayed white and airbrushed with aggressive flame patterns. Good luck, Roy!

Ten Miss Aruba contestants came to Bonaire for a four-day visit last week to compete against each other for the new Miss Flamingo Beach crown. It was a sort of try-out for the real thing which happens on July 13 when they compete to become the new Miss Aruba. The contest was organized by Tourism Corporation Bonaire (TCB).

It all started with a Welcoming Cocktail Party at Divi Flamingo Resort, although almost all the girls were drinking water. Contestant, 19-year old Jonella Oduber, explained that this visit to Bonaire and the Miss Flamingo Beach contest is a sort of test to see whether they can handle themselves in regard to the Miss Aruba contest. “So we can’t cross the line,” she said. “I’m also on a strict diet. There’s one girl in our group who is a dancer so she can eat whatever she wants. When we have dinner everybody is jealous of what she’s eating, as we only end up with a salad.” Oduber was very confident of her chances with the Miss Flamingo Beach contest, although she said, “Of course I think I’ll win, otherwise I wouldn’t have bothered to come here. If you’re not self-confident there’s no chance of becoming the new Miss Flamingo Beach or Miss Aruba.”

The trip to Bonaire was also meant for the girls to get to know each other better. “Like Bonaire,” Oduber said, “Aruba isn’t a very big island, so although I’ve seen many of the girls before we’ve never spoken to each. This trip is a good way of finding out who I am competing against.”

The four-day trip consisted of some promotional work for the contestants, snorkeling on Klein Bonaire and an island tour. They visited the new Friday night market, “Taste of Bonaire,” at Wilhelmina Park, where the girls, dancing together, soon attracted a lot of attention. On Sunday morning they posed for photos on Sorobon beach. (Ed. The beauty contestants were scheduled to visit the FKPD handicapped center where the members had prepared refreshments, displays of their handicrafts and were dressed in native costumes. When the Miss Aruba contestants didn’t show up the staff and members were very disappointed.)

The Miss Flamingo contest on Saturday night consisted of three rounds: evening dress, answering questions and the famous bikini round. The questions asked were the typical questions one could expect at a beauty contest. For example: What is negative about being beautiful? Answer: “That you have the chance of getting bad publicity.” Or “That your ego goes over the limit.” Does beauty have an effect on a person’s life? Answer: “Yes, first impressions are very important.” On which magazine cover would you like to be? Answer: “On Time Magazine because that means I’ve done something special for the community.” At the end of the night the jury decided that Tracy Nicolaas was the new Miss Flamingo Beach 2007. She will hold this title for one year.

Seven of the 10 Miss Aruba contestants: (not in order) Tracy Nicolaas, Carolina Ramos, Monique Pulido, Jonella Oduber, Maureen Valdis, Stephanie Croes, Boyora Rarijn, Nabilach de Palm, Tammy Wever, and Miranne German.

There's a dead zone where these corals meet, indicating that the corals are battling each other. A look at the shapes indicates that the sheet coral is winning the battle: it is overgrowing the head coral. A second look at the shapes indicates that the victory is a slow one, since the living part of the head coral is significantly bigger than its overgrown side.

One of the friendliest pups at the Bonaire Animal Shelter, “Lisette,” gives a little wave with her paw, as if to say, “Hi! Look at me; aren’t I the smartest and cutest?” Little light brown Lisette with the pretty eyes was brought into the Shelter with her litter mates. While she was on the street as a very young pup she was hit by a car. As a result she had some stiffness in her back legs, but as she grows that is going away. She’s now about three and a half months old. At first she was smaller than her sisters and brothers due to her injury, but she’s doing so well now and is catching up with the rest. She’ll be a medium sized dog when she does finally grow up. She’s a happy, playful pup who would appreciate love and attention.

Lisette has been checked out by the vet and has had her shots and tests. All is well and she’s ready to be adopted. You may see her at the Shelter on the Lagoen Road, open Monday through Saturday, 8 am to 1 pm. Tel. 717-4989. Enjoy a visit at a wonderfully run operation with happy and contented pets. □ L.D.

It turns out that last week’s Pet of the Week, “Charles,” the very handsome black and white cat, has an owner, none other than artist Henk Roozendaal and his family. We just knew he was a very special cat! Henk wrote: “I’m very proud that my cat, “Snoetje” (Snoozy), was declared Pet of the Week! Now after two weeks he’s home again at Sabadeco. He’s our oldest cat, saved from the Shelter in 1999. Many cats followed. He’s been my model for several early paintings.” (See Henk’s painting of Snoetje)

Henk was in Holland at the time when Snoetje went on an adventure. The cat became entranced apparently with a house with three indoor cats and because he was hanging around their house so often the people naturally assumed he was without a home. And as we are always asking people to bring in found animals to the Bonaire Animal Shelter, they did so. And the Roozendaals, after checking everywhere else, called the Shelter as well and were very happy and relieved to learn that Snoetje, aka Charles, was safe and sound there. Henk thinks that because of Snoetje’s two-week internment at the Shelter that he’ll most likely not want to take off on many more adventures in the near future. □ L.D.
Caribbean Homes Bonaire has entered into an agreement with Google Earth. The company uses Google's high resolution imagery of the earth to show its website visitors where on Bonaire their listings are located and have made it extremely simple to zoom in on the property and get a fairly detailed view of the area. "We hope this will help them explore more of our listings on our beautiful island from above," says Rene Essink, owner of Caribbean Homes Bonaire. See their ad on page 11. Press Release

Early next week you’ll be able to use an exquisite waxing Moon to find both planet #2 and planet #6 and the brightest star of springtime’s most famous constellation. On Monday, June 17th, just after sunset, face west where you’ll see an exquisite crescent Moon complete with Earthshine, which will look like a dim full Moon nestled within the bright crescent, or as some people like to call it, “the old Moon in the new Moon’s arms.” Then if you look up to its left you’ll see the most brilliant planet of them all, our so-called sister planet because it’s almost the same size as Earth, the planet named for the Roman goddess of love, and also bright and absolutely dazzling Venus. Twenty four hours later, on Tuesday June 18th, a slightly fatter crescent Moon will be well past Venus and still exhibiting Earthshine. And once again if you look up to its left you’ll see another beautiful planet, planet #6, the ringed planet Saturn which we’re visiting right now with our Cassini space probe. If you look at it through a small telescope it will absolutely stun you. And if you look at Venus you will notice that it looks like a tiny thick crescent Moon. So you’ve now been able to use the Moon on two nights to find two planets.

On Monday the Moon is down to the right of Venus, and on Tuesday it’s between Venus and Saturn. But our Moon finder journey is not over because 24 hours later, on Wednesday the 19th, the Moon will be parked right next to, visually speaking, the brightest star of springtime’s most famous constellation, Leo the Lion. But if you look at it through a telescope it won’t look any bigger, only brighter. And that’s because it’s so incredibly far away. How far? Well let’s compare its distance to that of the Moon, Venus and Saturn. Early next week our 2,000-mile-wide Moon will be only 236,000 miles away; 8,000-mile-wide Venus will be 60 million miles away; and 75,000-mile-wide Saturn will be 900 million miles away. But Regulus, which is a hot blue-white star, is a whopping 4 million miles wide and so far away we don’t use the term miles. Instead we measure its distance with the speed of light. For instance next week when you look at the Moon you will be seeing the light that left it only 1 1/3 seconds ago. But when you look at Venus you’ll be seeing the light that left it 5 1/3 minutes ago. And when you look at Saturn you’ll be seeing the light that left it 82 minutes ago. Regulus, however, is so whopping far away it takes its light 78 years to reach us. Wow!

Once again use the Moon on Monday to find Venus, use the Moon on Tuesday to find Saturn, and on Wednesday use the Moon to find Regulus.

ARIES (Mar. 21- April 20)  It might be best to work on your own; if possible, do your job out of your home this week. Take time to explain your intentions to loved ones. PISCES (Feb. 20-Mar. 20)  Opportunities may come up at prestigious affairs. Go out with friends and avoid the situation on the home front. You can meet new friends who will let you know just how valuable you are. Self-deception is likely. Your lucky day this week will be Sunday.
The Bonaire Bartender/Culinary Team for 2007 had its last fund raising dinner for the public last Sunday, and they’re ready to go to the Caribbean Hotel Association’s “Taste of the Caribbean” culinary Olympics in Miami. They leave Saturday and return Wednesday.

The final dinner was a monumental extravaganza of cuisine. Each of the three courses were made up of several tastes and textures, with a bare flavoring of salt as the common theme.

We wish all the very best to our team who has worked so hard and so long to reach the pinnacle of fine cuisine we tasted last Sunday. "L.D."
When we got married in Holland two years ago we had four options considering our names: Rik is Rik Roozenburg and I am Marieke Postema, so we could choose. Either I would take Rik’s last name or he would take mine, or we could have my last name first followed by his last name, or his last name first followed by mine. As we felt that we were marrying each other we wanted to use both names; so now Rik and I are both Roozenburg-Postema – one name. But… when we came to Bonaire and our son Roan was born, Rik went to have him registered and it appeared that Roan could get either Rik’s last name or mine - no other choice. So we gave him Rik’s last name; that’s a pity in a way because we wanted to have the same last names for the three of us.

Why are we here? When I finished my studies Rik’s temporary job was ending and we felt the whole world was open to us to do something exciting. I was a first grade cultural artistic education teacher and Rik was a gymnastics teacher. We went looking all over the world for a paid job, but with the little work experience we had we didn’t have a chance. So, we started looking for volunteer jobs. We could afford it because we live very economically and because we ended up in a third world country where everything was very cheap: Bolivia.

At a school in Cochabamba, founded by a Dutch foundation, they were looking for people who could teach the children crafts and sports, and so it had to be us! Cochabamba is located in a valley and the school with 450 children is on the outskirts of the valley, next to the landfill. People live in sod huts; they wash their clothes in a filthy little stream; and there’s a constant lack of water. We started teaching children from the ages of four to 14, and we also took care of the library and six old computers. We experienced truly horrible things: children with terrible injuries, children sniffing glue, abuse and incest, people living in the river, hunger and constant alcohol abuse by the men. But our respect for the Bolivian women is sky high. They have so much willpower and so much perseverance. They are the ones who keep everything going - without any complaint.

We worked for three organizations, six days a week, and we did everything we could, but in the end the only thing we could do was give people love and attention. To make a significant difference is super difficult.”

Rik (28) and Marieke (26) are people who live according to their principles; they spend very little money; they have a healthy lifestyle; and they’re happy, outgoing people who also think about the environment. For example they don’t use paper diapers for their baby, but cotton ones – they are true to their beliefs.

“When the year was over our money was gone, but we came back much richer than anyone could have made us feel. We went back to Holland and stayed for a year, but then we had to look for something new and again we wanted to go abroad. And, at the vacancy bank where we looked for jobs there was the SGB high school Bonaire looking for an art teacher – for me! Marieke laughs. “I was appointed almost immediately and then everything went very fast. We got married on May 27, 2005, then we started reading everything we could find about Bonaire. We watched the complete series, ‘Huize Huisman,’ made by a Dutch TV maker about Bonaire and we spoke with people who had lived on Bonaire.

We arrived July 13, 2005. A week later, sitting on the balcony of our apartment, we said to each other, ‘Jeez, imagine being born on such a divine island and growing up here and then, when you’re 16, you move to Holland – like many Antillean youngsters do – and you have to live in a grey apartment building in the outskirts of big city…’ That was the first feeling we had about the island – it is a wonderful place to live.

The first day I started working I saw the list of the names of the teachers and one name jumped out, ‘Mr. Postema.’ I asked everyone, ‘Do you know that man? I would like to meet him, and then… it turned out to be my husband whom I already knew quite well!’

“I came here without a job,” Rik says, “but soon enough I found one with Amado Felix as a mover. I was already working for Amado when SGB asked me to pass by. I had to show my diploma and immediately I got my new schedule. Then the school year started. I went to work part time and Marieke full time. After Marieke had gotten the job, when we were still in Holland, she found out she was pregnant. We had a lot of doubts at the time, but nevertheless we decided to go. Roan, our son, was born on Bonaire, at home, under the inspiring guidance of midwife Marita, January 11, 2006. He was full term but very little. He only weighed four pounds, but his health was very good and he started eating immediately. Marieke’s mom was there and her dad came two days later. We were ever so happy having them with us. When I’m not working I take care of Roan; otherwise he goes to a babysitter who takes care of three other little boys. He’s doing great; he’s learning Papiamentu and he eats everything.

Well, I came here and my passion is running, so I went to see what was happening here in that aspect. I asked around to see whether there were people who were doing something in athletics, and I met Glenn Albertina, the island’s athletics guru. He’s the Government’s Sports Coordinator. Together we revived a club called Quick Pro.

We started with two children and now, after 18 months, the club has a board, uniforms, and we’ve already won gold, silver and bronze medals in competitions in Cara- çao. I teach training three times a week, voluntarily, and now we have 20 children, some of whom have great talents. Our head sponsor is Auto City, and because of them we don’t have to ask the children for a contribution.

At school I am also trying to make the students more conscious of what they’re eating and what the consequences are of their diet. Authentic local food is very healthy, but the soft drinks and the snacks the children are consuming are taking their toll, and many of them are overweight. They see me as skinny, but they know I’m strong and it impresses them that I win a lot of competitions in spite of the fact that I’m not so talented, but because I’m training every day. I think as a teacher you should set the example.”

“I’m giving cultural artistic education,” Marieke explains, “and I’m setting it up for HAVO/VWO. What I see is that it’s going better and better and that the students love it. I give theatre classes, dancing classes, music, film and art classes and all that – as far as possible – from the Antillean culture. On Bonaire the children are very creative. They have great original ideas, and they’re good in finding solutions. I really enjoy it when the students give a presentation that gives me the goose bumps – something that happens frequently.

Well, we’re staying here for one more year and then we’re going back to Holland for the family and from then on we’ll see. We’ll take whatever the future will bring. To us Bonaire will always be the island of freedom and the warm sunshine, and for a child it’s a wonderful place to grow up.”

“Winfried Dania told me once,” Rik says, “that the sun is his medicine, and I think that’s a beautiful way to put it.”
